Radiotherapy Side Effects

Hair loss

- Unfortunately you will lose your hair in the area being treated approximately three weeks into your treatment. When your hair grows back it may be a slightly thinner or a different colour or texture.
- The radiotherapy team can give you information and advice on the purchase of a wig.
- During radiotherapy use a mild baby shampoo and gently towel dry your hair.

Nausea/Headaches

- Radiotherapy can cause inflammation in your Brain and therefore headaches and occasionally nausea. Your consultant can prescribe pain-killers and/or anti-sickness medication to resolve these side effects.
- If you are struggling to eat as you normally would: try to eat little and often, eat your favourite foods and substitute lower calorie items for high calorie equivalents.

Skin Reaction

- Ask your Radiation Therapists for advice if you wish to wear make-up
- Your skin can become red and itchy in the treatment area
- Use Simple Soap followed by E45 or Aqueous Cream to wash and moisturise the treatment area.
- Wash the treated skin gently with warm water, and pat dry with a soft towel.
- Do not expose the treatment area to extreme hot or cold as it is now more sensitive.
- If your skin starts to become red or itchy avoid swimming as the chlorine may irritate your skin.

Tiredness

- You will become tired during and after your course of treatment.
- Know your limits and do not exceed them. Rest when you need to and get at least 8 hours sleep each night.
- Drink at least 2 litres of water daily and maintain a healthy balanced diet.

Pregnancy Status (if applicable)

- It is very important that you do not become pregnant during the course of your radiotherapy.
- You will need to use contraception while you are on treatment if you are of child-bearing age and if you are sexually active. Your hospital or family doctor can give you advice on contraception, family planning or Well Woman Clinics will also advise you.
- If you think you may be pregnant please inform the Radiation Therapist or Consultant as soon as possible.
